Definition of Service Learning at the University of Northern Iowa:
At the University of Northern Iowa, service-learning is a class-based experience, co-created with community partners, intended to expand and deepen discipline-specific knowledge and skills, strengthen the community, and develop a student's sense of civic responsibility.

In service-learning classes:

1. Students build critical thinking and professional communication skills.
2. Service-learning activities align with academic coursework, providing a deeper understanding of the academic discipline.
3. Service-learning activities align with community strengths and needs.
4. Faculty prepare students to work with the community partner.
5. Service-learning activities prepare students for active citizenship and social responsibility.
6. Faculty engage students in purposeful and guided reflection.
7. Service-learning builds student’s cultural competence for engaging with diverse populations in diverse settings.

In summary, service-learning is the integration of service and learning to enhance each.
